'Wallpaper' Is 63 Years Old

Mrs. Jane Tibbs and other children and grandchildren of the E. W. Marshalls, working at the Tanner home place, near Spring Mills (now owned by J. B. English of New York) found that the old kitchen had been papered and underneath, layer upon layer of old Buckingham-Appomattox Times newspapers including part of the January 30, 1907 edition. They found "fashions" almost like today, says Mrs. Tibbs. The editor was A. H. Clement, and items in the papers include a proposal to move the N&W tracks at Evergreen (which was never done, according to her mother, Mrs. E. W. Marshall) and a "Southside" column comment that January weather was cold and blustery and "We just feel like saying 'I told you so' to the many who have predicted that we were not going to have any bad weather." Doesn't that have a familiar ring?
